WHAT IS "PERSECUTION"?

Persecutors in our enlightened age, as a rule, are ashamed of their occupation. They dare not openly defend warfare on their fellowmen on account of difference of opinions, as was done by many persecutors from the days of Augustine and all through the middle ages. The spirit of the time is general-ly against tais evidence of barbarism. The persecutors are, therefore, under the necessity of representing them-selves as champions of law and order There is, they say, a wide difference between persecution and prosecution, between persecutors and prosecutors, and they claim the distinction of being prosecutors only.

Now, this argument may appear to some as exceedingly lucid and forcible. But it is, nevertheless, a clumsy effort to divert attention from the real nature of the work of those engaged in bitter persecution. It is as if a physician were to defend the willful killing of an enemy under the pretext of performing a necessary operation. The crime would be foul murder just the same, no matter how elaborate the efforts to conceal the fact. And so, persecution is persecution, whatever may be the pretext for it. And persecutors cannot success-fully conceal their bulky masses by burying their ugly beaks in the ground Prosecution sometimes is nothing but persecution in disguise. It is safe to so characterize it, when the Evil One himself and his tools assume the role of prosecutors. A well-known instance is that of the woman in the Gospel narrative upon whose conduct the Savior was asked to pass judgment, by a crowd of hypocrites and moral per-verts. The Master knew them and their secret motives, and, though they, cer tainly, in their accusations happened to be on the side of the law. He answered them as they deserved, by enunciating the principle that the one among them without sin might cast the first stone. They were persecutors in the guise of prosecutors, and no fit accusers of a weak fellow being. Hence the rebuke, so well merited, no matter what was the status of their victim. It is a pity that modern Pharisees so often forget this fundamental principle of justice, and undertake to sweep the premises of their neighbors with their own solled brooms, unfit for anything but the moral garbage pile!

Again, when alleged prosecutors

Again, when alleged prosecutors show unjust discrimination, they may rightfully be branded as persecutors. If several persons are guilty of the same inisconduct, and only one is called to account; if this in invariably the rule, prosecution becomes persecution. Clearing Sale, 25 Per Cent Discount particularly if malice and thirst for re- On the entire stock of clothing. Rich & venge are the sentiments inspiring the proceedings. A man who singles out a certain class in a community and makes them the objects of false reports, exaggerating their possible human weaknesses, misinterpreting every weaknesses, misinterpreting every word, doing all in his power to in-flame mobs and turn friendship into hatred, and all this for personal gain alone, he is as surely a persecutor as Nero was though he may hide himself behind a prosecutor. An instance of this is furnished by the sufferings of the Jews in Russia. It has been abundantly proved that the prejudices and superstitions of the Russians are periodically and methodically made use of by unscrupulous scoundrels against that unfortunate race. The mobs are stirred up to murder and pillage to hide the guilt of the agitators, and to help them fill their pockets with plunder. But these agitators and their tools are persecutors, even if they can prove that Jews are mortals, sometimes with the weak-nesses and faults of mortals. Their motives and their modes of procedure formers, were at one time notorious law-breakers. What was Luther, when he staked his life in opposition to the emperor and the diet? Or, when he broke his vows and induced a nun, pledged to single life, to become his wife? As seen through the glasses of his antagonists, he was a transgressor of the laws of both God and man, and if he had not succeeded in his work he would, in all probability, have been so regarded by historians to this day. While concealed at Wartburg, was be not virtually a "fugitive from justice?" Gustavus Vasa was a "traitor," when he, at the head of insurgents, over-turned the oppressive rule of foreigners in his country, but he is neverthe-less one of the greatest patriots and fiberators of history. And how many of these are there who did not com-mence their career in opposition to some law, or lawful institution?"

And so it goes, "Law-breakers" of one age are often, in succeeding ages, honored as heroes, martyrs, and reformers. And it follows as a corollary that the prosecutors of one age often are by other ages branded as persecutors. Sometimes laws have to be broken or progress would be impossible, beor progress would be impossible, because all human laws are imperfect and need modification, as times and conditions change. These are simple facts of history and experience, which should not be overlooked when the subject of persecution is discussed. All law breakers are rectainly not markers. law-breakers are certainly not martyrs, or reformers. No same person makes that assertion. Many law-breakers in all ages are simply malefactors. But many of the martyrs whom we now honor were also classed among the lawbreakers of their age, and history re-peats itself from age to age—a fact it would be consummate folly to deny.
